

In August of 2002, my son moved into University Commons in Cayce, South Carolina to attend the University of South Carolina. the kids were encouraged to purchase their Internet service from ONYA wireless and were offered a discount if they paid for the entire year up front. We accepted this offer. This week, they lost their service abruptly and unexpectedly. No effort has been made by ONYA to make refund fees to these kids. In fact, they have disconnected phones and are not answering e-mail inquiries. The kids hear that the owner has disappeared.

What recourse do we have to deal with this company?
